WIFE LEFT.

Took Linen and Various Articles, a Well as Children's Small Savings.

George Ferris, whose wife deserted him Saturday morning, broke up housekeeping Monday morning, removing his furniture from the Raynes court tenement to the home of his parents on Broad street. Ferris said Monday afternoon that after his wife lift he investigated and found that all the table linen and other valuable small wares, as well as the content's of the children's savings bank, something over $30, were missing. He said that the purport of the letter which he found addressed to him from his wife was that she had left him for good, as he no longer appealed to her. The seven months old baby boy that she left crying in bed when she went away with the little girl, is being taken care of by Mr. Ferris' parents on Broad street. It is subposed that Mrs. Ferris is either in Pawtucket, R. I., of Taunton, Mass. The trunk that she took with her from their home on Raynes court was salpped to Pawtucket, E. I. Decision Reserved in Chappell Gase.

Monday forenoon at 10 o'clock a hearing was held in the selectmen's room at the town building on the question of transportation for the Chappell children. Howall Cheney of South Manchester, a member of the state board of education, and C. D. Hine, secretary of the state board, were present. Mr. Cheney acted as chairman A stenographer was also present, as were Dr. Guild, chairman of the local school committee, Dr. W. P. S./Keating, T. J. Kelley, L. B. Lincoln and Mrs. K. J. Spaulding, also of the local committee, State Agent Henry J. Potter, S. G. Chappell, the father of the chlidren in need of some provision, and Mr. Lincoln, the man who drives the bus for the school children.

The matter was pretty thoroughly Decision Reserved in Chappell Case.

The matter was pretty thoroughly discussed by those present and the tendency upon the part of the members of the state board appeared to favor Mr. Chappell's appeal, although the decision in the matter was reserved.

NATIVE OF CANTERBURY.

Characteristics of Judge Daniel W. Bond, Whose Death Was Announced Monday.

Judge Daniel W. Bond, who died at his home in Waltham on Sunday, was well known in this section of east-ern Connecticut, in the towns of which are relatives of his and men and we-men who were students under him dur-ing the time that he taught school in a neighboring town. A Boston paper of Monday printed a picture of the little house in Canterbury where Judge Bond was born.

Judge Bond was obliged to earn his education and taught school to pay his expenses while he was studying law.

In 1860 he entered the Columbia law school, where he soon became known as a brilliant student. His early education was obtained in Plainfield scademy and at the New Britary normal school. While he was studying law he learned shorthand and aid his expenses in New York by convenience in New York by the York he learned shorthand and aid his expenses in New York by reporting lectures for the morning papers.

He became an expert shorthand reporter and acquired a habit of making shorthand notes, which has stayed with him through all of his lig. In every case at which he has ever presided as judge, he has taken the evidence in full in shorthand. In two cases, one in which the stenographer died shortly after the trial, and in another in which the stenographer's notes were burned up, Judge Bond was able to supply a full bill of exceptions to the losing side from his notes.

In Columbia, he won the Liebner prize of $200 in the department of political science, and was graduated a bachelor of laws in 1862. After a year in Providence, he moved to Massachusetts, was admitted to the bar in Hampshire county and made his home in Florence, that state. As a young man, Judge Bond won a fine reputation as a criminal lawyer, conducting some very important cases. As a judge he became prominent by presiding at many notable trials, the last of which was that of Hattie LeBlanc, finished only a few weeks ago.

was that of Hattie LeBlanc, finished only a few weeks ago.

During all of his long life, Judge Bond retained a strong affection for his native town in old Windham county, and up to within a few years it was his custom to spend some time each summer in Canterbury. He liked the open life and was an especially good judge and fond of horses, owning at one time a pair that he imported from England, and which were regarded as the finest in Massachusetts.

Frank Sponcey Placed in Care of Pro bation Officer-Resisted Officer Jul ius Cordier-Bill Drafted to Affect Blacklisted Men-News in General

Blacklisted Men—News in General.

In the city court Monday Frank Sponcey, 32, of this city was the principal figure, and the charges against him were intoxication and breach of the peace. Sponcey appeared with a couple of ugly scalp wounds and a ridge across the top of his cranium, the result of a fracas that he had near midnight Saturday with Officer Julius Cordier, who patrols the Providence street section of the city. The assault alleged was in connection with the row with the policeman. Incidentally, Sponcey gave Officer Cordier such a trimming in February of 1908 that in the local city court op the 24th day of that month in that year he was sentenced to serve 270 days in jail and pay a fine of 3158; so, whether the act was justified or not, Officer Cordier squared an old account Saturday night. When Sponcey beat him up, and did it with the officer's own stick. Cordier was laid up for several days. This old incident had an indirect bearing on the case heard in the city court Monday, and there was some criticism of Officer Cordier's severity in dealing with Sponcey.

After hearing the evidence which was somephat long drawn out and threw many sidelights on the matter, Judge Fuller continued the case for two weeks and placed Sponcey in the care of Probation Officer Bowen.

Officer Chaffee figured in an unimportant way in the incident preceding the arrest of Sponcey on Saturday evening, Officer Cordier calling him to his assistance from the business section of the city, some time before the happening above chronicled occurred, Officer Cordier calling him to his assistance from the business section of the city, some time before the happening above chronicled occurred, Officer Cordier calling him to his assistance from the business section of the city, some time before the happening above chronicled occurred, Officer Cordier calling him to his assistance from the business section of the city, some time before the happening above chronicled occurred, Officer Cordier calling him to

A plump little pony with rickly colored beltings about his sleek black body and rosettes as additional decorations where they would be most effective was the Celossus in D'Alma's animal show at the Bradley theater Monday. The act also included a collection of dogs and monkeys that were so well trained as to transport the large number of childern present into the seventh heaven of delight and to win the unqualified approval of the grown-ups as well. It was the best act of its kind ever seen here.

Everybody but the pony had a lovely time. He didn't have as much fun as usual, because the stage was slippery, which circumstance gave him a couple of falls. Otherwise his part of the act was good.

BLACKLISTED MEN

Will Be Liable to Penalty for Trying to Buy Liquor, if New Bill Goes

An original Graft of a bill that will be introduced in the legislature before the time for filing new business expires (Feb. 2) has been prepared by a Putnem man, and provides a penalty for any man on the black list who attempts to buy liquor at a licensed place, or who lotters about such a place. Under the present statute the man who does the selling is along subject to penalty. It is often the case that bartenders do not know all the man who does the selling is alone subto, and as these men are aware of that fact, they often come in and buy, laying the seller open to prosecution. The bill in present form provides for a fine of $7 for any blacklisted man who attempts to buy liquor or who loiters about where it is legally sold.
